Criteria	Seedling/Punka (Basic)	Sprout/Sibol (Intermediate)	Budding/Usbong (Advanced)	Fruitful/Bunga (Sustained Excellence)
Available Space for Gardening. The size of the garden space determines the potential for crop production and sustainability. Larger areas allow for more diverse plantings and expansion into other agricultural activities such as grain crops and livestock. Urban and container gardening can be added to the size of the garden.	At least 100 sq. meters of garden space	At least 150 sq. meters of garden space	200 sq. meters or more of garden space.	Expanded beyond 200 sq. meters, incorporating additional agricultural areas (e.g., grain crops, livestock).
Crop Production (Vegetables, Palay, and Other Grain Crops) A well-maintained school garden should grow a variety of vegetables and, where possible, palay and other grain crops. Increasing the number of crops contributes to food security, learner nutrition, and agricultural learning.	At least 5 vegetable crops (100 sq. meters)	10 to 15 vegetable crops (150 sq. meters)	20 or more vegetable crops (200 sq. meters).	Fully integrated crop diversity, including livestock and aquaculture. Expansion of production to include palay, other grain crops, and livestock (e.g., chicken, ducks, goats, fish, etc.)
Yields and Utilization (School-Based Feeding Program - SBFP, Supplementary Feeding, and Income-Generating Projects - IGP). This criterion evaluates how much produce is harvested and how effectively it is used. The goal is to maximize production for school-based feeding programs (SBFP), supplementary feeding, and income-generating projects (IGP) to support school initiatives.	Produces at least 10 kg per crop for feeding programs	Produces 20-30 kg per crop; surplus sold or shared with communities.	Produces 50 kg or more per crop; active in Income Generating Projects (IGP)	High yields with strong financial sustainability of school and community benefits.
Gardening Methods and Innovations. The adoption of advanced gardening techniques ensures sustainability and efficiency. Fully innovative approach, integrating excellent agriculture techniques.
Garden Sustainability (Maintaining Garden Even During Summer). A sustainable garden continues to thrive even when classes are not in session. This requires long-term planning, community involvement, and maintenance strategies such as summer caretakers (PTA, teachers, or students).	Garden maintained during school months only.	Partial maintenance during summer with some crops sustained	Fully functional year-round with summer caretakers (students, PTA, or community involvement)	Fully self-sustaining with long-term management plans.
Stakeholder Collaboration (Engagement with Partners and External Support). Partnerships with government agencies (e.g., Department of Agriculture), NGOs, and local businesses provide technical expertise, funding, and resources to support and enhance the school garden.	Engages with at least one external partner (e.g., DA-LAO, NGOs, LGUs)	Has multiple stakeholders supporting the garden program	Implements formal agreements (MOA/MOU) with various stakeholders for technical and financial support	Strong multi-sector partnerships with continuous funding and technical support.

This ensures continuous crop production and reduces reliance on external seed sources	Saves seeds for internal school use	Shares seeds with nearby schools	Establishes a seed bank and formal seed exchange program	Recognized as a model seed hub for sustainable farming
Water Management. A reliable water source is essential for maintaining a productive garden. Schools may utilize different water sources, including rainwater, collection, wells, pumps, and cooperative water systems, to ensure year-round irrigation.	Uses rainwater or limited water sources (e.g., river, wells, pumps)	Organized water system with wells, pumps, or irrigation	Water cooperative or waterworks system ensuring sustainable irrigation	Advanced water conservation systems (drip irrigation, water recycling, etc.)
Nutrition Education (Awareness Among Students on the Benefits of Vegetables). This criterion assesses how well students understand the nutritional value of vegetables and their role in a healthy diet. Schools should integrate nutrition education into their curriculum and promote awareness campaigns.	50% of students are aware of basic vegetable nutrition	70% of students can identify crops and their nutritional benefits.	90% or more students have in-depth knowledge of nutritional values and food security	Integrated nutrition education with strong community engagement.
Advocacy Campaign (Promoting Nutrition and Food Production Awareness). Gardening programs should extend beyond food production to include advocacy efforts, such as nutrition month celebrations, social media campaigns, poster-making contests, and cooking competitions to reinforce the importance of healthy eating	Conducts basic nutrition education (classroom discussions, posters).	Engages in school-wide advocacy (slogan making, social media, IEC materials, cooking contest at the school level during Nutrition month and supplementary feeding)	Hosts nutrition contests, media campaigns, and community outreach. Supplementary feeding in school.	Recognized as a model for nutrition advocacy in the community
